Design Guide

Natural Stone looks most authentic when laid in a random design; this type of layout is also very suitable for most of our paving ranges. There are no fixed rules for random layouts and it is not difficult to obtain a pleasing effect - let your own taste and judgement produce a layout that looks right to you.

LAYING GUIDE

The area to be laid should be excavated to a depth of 20cm, removing any topsoil and vegetation and ensuring where applicable that falls slope away from building and walls with at least a 1:60 gradient. You should make sure that the finished surface level is at least 15cm below the damp proof course. Lay a minimum depth of 7.5cm compacted stone to cover the excavated area. Then lay a minimum depth of 10cm wet concrete bed foundation using 4 parts coarse aggregate to 2 parts building sand to 1 part cement.

Lay the sets on a 4cm compacted thickness of semi-dry cement mix (3 parts sand to 1 part cement) with a nominal joint width of 1.5-2cm. Bed the sets down with a pavior's maul and then fully compact (for large areas the hire of a plate vibrator is recommended). In dry weather and when the sets are dry, fill the joints and pack firmly as the work proceeds with a semi-dry mix of 3 parts sand to 1 part cement, ensuring no pointing mix remains on the surface of the sets.

USING SEALANT

If laying any of the products indoors, the use of a sealant is recommended to provide a barrier against stains and to make cleaning easier. For external applications it is not essential but may give a darker, richer tone, possibly with a more lustrous surface.
